

SEA LORD

Bernard Cornwell

Of the great wealth that once belonged to the earldom of Stowey, only one thing remains: a painting, a Van Gogh worth millions. When it is stolen, the prime suspect is none other than the heir, John Rossendale himself. Suddenly John becomes a target; persecuted by his family, wooed by a wealthy art collector, and sought after by a beautiful contessa. But who is friend? Who is foe? Rossendale can't tell—until, in the fog-shrouded waters of the Channel, the enemy is revealed to him at last.

GRACIE

George Burns

There was no one quite like her. Whether in vaudeville, on the radio, in films or on television, there was only one Gracie Allen: loveable, confused Gracie who once cut her vacuum cleaner cord in half so she could save electricity, and who another time pleaded with her audience, 'If I say the right thing, please forgive me.' Now, her story is told with love and laughter by the man who knew her best. It is the story, too, of their romance—so strong it lasted for forty years.

THE LOST GIANTS

Alan Scholefield

Beginning a new life in a remote valley in the Rocky Mountains was not the kind of future which Margaret Dow, a well-bred young lady from Edinburgh, had envisaged for herself when she set off on a journey across America with her elderly father. But on that untamed continent in the 1870s, anything was possible. And certainly it seemed Margaret's life was fated to take a very unexpected course from the moment she met the unpredictable George Renton—and heard about his search for a lost valley of giant trees.
