

THE VOLUNTEERS

by Douglas Reeman

They were volunteers; a small band whose secret war was fought in enemy waters—in small, powerful craft that had no names, only numbers.

Lieutenant Richard Allenby was one of those men—an explosives expert with a key role to play in dislodging the German foothold in Europe. Then there was Coxswain Mark Ives, whose coolheaded bravery inspired the whole flotilla; and finally Lieutenant Keith Frazer, the handsome Canadian navigator, who refused the command of a corvette to stay with his men.

Douglas Reeman's latest novel not only tells the action-packed story of these three courageous volunteers, but also captures the hopes and fears of the women they left behind.

OUTRAGE

by Henry Denker

Dennis Riordan is an angry man. His daughter has been brutally murdered. Her killer has confessed, yet a judge has let the murderer go free on legal technicalities. Heartbroken and outraged, Riordan decides to take the law into his own hands.

Thus begins a riveting drama that brings Riordan himself into a hostile courtroom, an honest man whose crime was to seek justice.

Outrage highlights a dilemma common to our times: should a jury find a man guilty if the law fails him and he is driven to seek justice for himself? A taut, suspense-filled novel by the author of The Scofield Diagnosis, The Warfield Syndrome and Horowitz and Mrs. Washington.

THE INCREDIBLE JOURNEY

by Sheila Burnford

This is the story of three remarkable characters: Luath, a resourceful and sensitive young Labrador; Tao, the hunter, a sleek, wheat-coloured Siamese cat; and Bodger, the tough old bull terrier with merriment in his eyes.

They were left in good hands while their owners lived abroad. But their yearning for home was strong, so they started out, across two hundred and fifty miles of Canadian wilderness, moving instinctively towards the place where they belonged. Their chances of survival were slim, yet they pressed on. And on their incredible journey, they brightened the lives of those they met in amazing ways. A classic tale, brushed with a special magic.

RED CRYSTAL

by Clare Francis

In a quiet London suburb the wife of the commissioner of police is blown to pieces by a parcel bomb intended for her husband. This killing signals the emergence of The Crystal Faction—a fanatical terrorist group committed to the overthrow of society.

Special Branch officer Nick Ryder has orders to infiltrate the cell before it is too late. But the beautiful photographer who befriends him is also his ruthless adversary, and his mission becomes entangled in a web of deadly complications . . .

Following the gigantic success of Night Sky, Clare Francis has written a tough, sophisticated thriller that firmly establishes her as one of the most exciting novelists of our time.
